I received the ordered motherboard quickly and well packed. However, although the supplier has declared that he has tested it OK, once it was mounted on the PC it was intended for, it did not work, not turning on the video and without giving any signaling beeps. I have detected that the Real Time Clock battery was completely exhausted so as not to give access to the BIOS. I replaced the Real Time myself and reset the BIOS: now the card works correctly. However, I believe that if the board was sold as functioning, the component should have been replaced originally, possibly even with a higher selling price. A buyer with no knowledge of electronics would have had to return the card or scrap it.
